If only I wasn't too tired. It's hard to believe that when you're reaching for remote control after a tiring day, but exercise will really insinolate you only you. You just take the first step out the door, said Professor of Exercise Psychology John M. Noble, Ph.M., of the University of Nebraska at Omaha. Tell yourself that you can quit for 10 minutes if you really feel too drained to keep going. Most likely, you will continue. And, you'll start noting results after just a few sessions. In a 2008 University of Georgia study of healthy but tired adults, exercising three times a week for six weeks significantly improved the energy levels of the subject. And people who exercise low intensity, like walking, see the most benefits. 2. I'm too busy. Drive to the gym, change clothes, practice, take a shower, drive home... Who has the time? Challenge the idea that you need to exercise in a gym, says Felicia Stoler, a clinical nutritionist. Start with a 15-minute block - say, a dumbbell session before breakfast, a lunchtime walk, and a neighborhood round after dinner with family. These will add up - and show that if you commit accordingly, you can find time. 3. I don't feel comfortable around strangers. If the prospect of complex workouts makes you nervous, rethink your plans, Texas Tech University sports and exercise psychology professor Marc Marc Dr. His three-way approach: familiar moves (walking, crunches, or even aerobics videos), a friendly environment (in your home or neighborhood), and your most nonjudgmental girlfriend to work out with. Then, if you want to conquer the gym, try a community center or Y, says nutrition and fitness expert Pamela M. Peeke, M.D. They're less likely to have that "gym-rat" feel. Start with part of the device, and work from there. 4. It's just not fun. You can underestimate how much you will enjoy physical activity. Researchers at the University of British Columbia found that when people think about exercise, they tend to focus on (often uncomfortable) the first few minutes - and so fear begins. But after an hour of long workouts, the participants evaluated it positively. So find a happier way to launch, like starting your playlist with your favorite songs, suggests lead author Matthew B. Ruby. And think about how exciting moves will be coming up, as well as how good you feel after a session. Well, when the market endured that painful sell-off in March, it pushed down the value of the stock. At the time, however, the volatility was so high and there were so many unknowns that it was hard to stack up names. So still cheap stock to buy right now? Short answer? Have. That brutal decline in the second quarter created a lot of cheap names. But in many cases, it is difficult to say what is cheap and what is a trap. That's because we don't know how businesses will react to the new environment. However, as we near the end of 2020 - with all major U.S. stock indices at new highs - it's clear the market is doing well. And there are still some cheap stocks on it, waiting to grab a bid from the buyer. InvestorPlace - Stock Market News, Stock Advisory & Grading Tips of the hottest SPACs of 2020 in preparation for the new year I recently looked at some cheap options that have become not cheap in the past month or so. So let's see if we can find some other bargains now. Alibaba (NYSE:BABA) Qualcomm (NASDAQ:QCOM) AT&T (NYSE:T) Gogo (NASDAQ:GOGO) Walgreens (NASDAQ:WBA) Ally Financial (NYSE:ALLY) Bristol-Myers Squibb (NYSE:BMJ Shutterstock.com) they may not think they will see a tech company grow with a market capitalization of more than $648 billion. But that's what we have with Alibaba. Why are BABA shares on this list? Well, when I'm looking for cheap stocks, I'm not just after the name with a low price-to-earnings ratio. I am also looking for stocks with unique fundamentals or cheap compared to the growth rate of the company. That's exactly what we have with Alibaba. From its peak to recent, the stock fell nearly 34%. Now, the price sits at over $234. But I have a rule of thumb called 40% rule - when a high-quality company falls 40%, it's worth a close check. Although Alibaba has not completely fallen that far, it's worth a look. Shares are falling on legal concerns for both itself and Ant Group, which later held a third of the shares. However, I see the headlines about the technology company's current regulations as nothing more than the Chinese government bending over. This will also pass and the focus will eventually shift back to the company's fundamentals. So with its absolute dominance in china's e-commerce space its outstanding assets, infrastructure and growth. Alibaba is darn cheap. While at 16.7 times forward price earnings, consensus estimates call for earnings growth of 37% this year and nearly 21% next year. On the earnings front, estimates call for 48% growth this year 30.5% next year. Qualcomm (QCOM) Source: Akshdeep Kaur Raked / Shutterstock.com Next in my list of low-cost stocks is Qualcomm. Thanks to a giant catalyst with 5G technology, Qualcomm is set to stir up high-quality growth in the near future. Plus, its agreement with Apple (NASDAQ:AAPL) ensures that it will have reliable customers at the other end of the transaction. Even so, though, the stock has wobbled up near its new highs. The stock fell 9% in three days in mid-December. For now, the stock remains 5.7 percent below this month's highs, giving investors the opportunity to buy in. The company also recently began fiscal year 2021, where consensus estimates call for 40% revenue growth. For this, investors currently pay only about 21 times the forward price income. The 7 safest stocks to start 2021 on the right foot Moreover, although next year's estimates call for a reduction in growth, they still call for overall growth. Throw in a dividend yield of 1.73% - almost double the 10-year Treasury yield - and Qualcomm looks attractive. &AT&T (T) Source: Jonathan Weiss/Shutterstock AT&T T Source: Some analysts find itself in the list of cheap stocks to buy right now. But with such a large dividend output and low price, how can it not? Currently, the name pays out a yield of 7.3% - a huge yield against fixed income and most other dividends. Moreover, stock exchanges are at just 9 times this year's earnings estimate. With that said, though, there are some red flags. Firstly, T shares this year fell big, falling 27.3% in 2020 while the S&P 500 rose 15.5%. Second, the company went five quarters without raising its dividend. And finally, it has a ton of heavy debt in the range of $170 billion. Now let's solve it. The stock has ebbed and flowed around the mid-$20s to the mid-$30s for the past five years. During that period, buying under $30 generally rewarded shareholders and - without Covid-19 hitting - the stock was set for a move above $37 and perhaps up to $40s. Of course, the choice not to raise dividends earlier this month is surprising given that AT&T is not going to raise the dividend. T is an Aristocrat dividend. That said, AT&T T has only been raising quarterly payments by one percent of shares over the past few years. So raising dividends is an attempt to keep the streak alive more than anything else. Plus, at 7.3%, do we really need higher yields when that additional cash flow can reduce debt? Speaking of debt, AT&T continues to refine at extremely low interest rates and is looking to divest assets beyond its core strategy. The company's acquisition of TimeWarner is expensive, but it's a free cash flow machine. Finally, its HBO Max unit is now available through Roku (NASDAQ:ROKU) and will gain considerable traction Gogo (GOGO) Source: EQRoy/Shutterstock.com In this article, I mentioned that special cases sometimes create a unique basic may affect what I consider one of the cheap stocks. I think we have that with Gogo. Too often, investors are willing to ignore situations like this - they shadow over the price-earnings ratio and can glance at some revenue growth estimates. In Gogo's case, stocks could have a very strong 2021, if catalysts continue to queue. The company basically has two business units: commercial aviation (CA) and business aviation (BA). Recently, though, it announced the sale of its CA units, which is a negative contributor to the bottom line and cash flow. But the risk for Gogo is that the deal won't close until soon Q1. Well, the company let it out earlier this month that the deal was actually closed. At a high level, the stock was up 13.4% in a day on the news, but since then it has abandoned those benefits. It now trades just under $10. Removing the CA unit for nothing would benefit Gogo, given its financial drag. Getting $400 million in cash is infinitely better, however. That will give the company flexibility when cleaning its balance sheet and leveraging profitable BA units moving forward. 9 stocks long term for the next decade So is this a target takeover? Perhaps. But even if it's not, Gogo stock is cheap and worth a closer look. Walgreens (WBA) Source: saaton/Shutterstock.com Return to cheap stock with slightly less unique circumstances, though, Walgreens may bring some nice value to investors. In fact, WBA shares have been stuck in the mud for years, bobbling along while the rest of the market chugs higher. It's not a great sales pitch, but it seems the value is getting too hard to ignore. The stock fell nearly $33 in late October shortly after earnings, before taking off and temporarily clearing $44 a month later. Later, news of Amazon's pharmaceutical plan (NASDAQ:AMZN) touched the wire and both Walgreens and CVS (NYSE:CVS) suffered from craters. It's typical Amazon is taking over the world's price action. However, when it comes to it, Amazon rarely rushes in and takes up all market share. So I don't expect the collapse of the WBA to happen as a result. All that said, the company is preparing for modest top and bottom growth both this year and next year. The stock trades at an 8.1-time earnings level and pays a dividend of 4.75%. That left some meat on the bone for investors. Financial Allies (ALLY) Source: Shutterstock This year, energy was the worst performing sector available by a long shot. While the financial sector is doing much better, however, it is the second worst operating group. However, there seems to be some value in many individual shares. Ally Financial is one of the topics - and it's really unique. That's because of both its price and its stock performance. Stocks badly affected in February, a decrease of about 25% at the end of the month. Then, despite rising 51% from a low in March, ALLY shares ended the month significantly lower than Price. That speaks to the volatility it has seen this year. Since then, though, Ally has gathered for nine months in a row. It's a rare price action even for the best-functioning stocks this year. The company has crushed earnings estimates for the past two quarters and is a few days away from the end of the final quarter of fiscal 2020. Then it begins fiscal year 2021, where analysts are calling for 10% revenue growth and even better earnings. 7 under-priced stock could skyrocket in 2021 So even if it's at new highs, ALLY seems like one of those cheap stocks to buy, trading with earnings nearly 9.2 times forward. On top of that, stocks trade with book value less than once. As such, savvy investors should take a closer look at this name on a dip. Bristol-Myers Squibb (BMY) Source: Piotr Swat/Shutterstock.com Last but not least on my list of low-cost stocks is Bristol-Myers Squibb. BMY shares continue not getting the credit I believe it deserves. The current company is the result of a acquisition of Celgene, which Bristol-Myers received just over a year ago at the end of 2019 for $74 billion. This is a big deal that creates great long-term value. Celgene had a low price, but it wasn't very well done, driving that price even lower. That under-price is also present in Bristol-Myers, as Wall Street forces stocks into proving it's mode. This company is here to do it. Like many other names on this list, Bristol-Myers trades 10 times less than the forward price income. Because it involves adding to Celgene's results, comparing current year estimates with the previous year doesn't do well. Instead, we'll look at the estimates going forward. While estimates tend to be inaccurate, analysts expect revenue growth of 9% in fiscal 2021 and earnings growth of 17%. And given that the company has beaten on earnings estimates consistently, perhaps even these figures are conservative. It also helped the stock pay a dividend of 3.2%. So will Wall Street reward Bristol-Myers with a higher price? Who knows. But if it brings expectations, the company will bring great value to shareholders. Ackman also made headlines this year by raising $4 billion to launch Pershing Square Justice Holdings Ltd (NYSE: PSTH) SPAC, which is now the largest SPAC on the market. At the time of the IPO in July, Ackman said SPAC expected to take about six months to determine its goals and announce a deal in the first quarter of 2021. Even after Pershing Square's big operations in 2020, the stock is still trading at a significant discount to NAV. Pershing's stock portfolio is relatively concentrated. As of the time of the company's most recent quarterly filing, Pershing held only shares of seven shares. His three largest stakes include Lowe's Companies Inc (NYSE: LOW), Chipotle Mexican Grill, Inc. (NYSE: CMG) and Restaurant Brands International Inc (NYSE: QSR). Benzinga's Take: Ackman has a long track record of home runs and dud investments. In years like 2020, he seems like an investment genius, while past losing bets on Valeant Pharmaceuticals and Border BookStores has left investors scratching their heads. Investors should look to Ackman and his funds to continue to be high-risk, high-reward investments in 2021 and beyond. DEEP DIVE (Update the story with year-end closing prices and consensus price targets) During the stock market's March plunge, it may be hard to expect 2020 to end as a good year for stocks, but extremely low interest rates from the Federal Reserve, unprecedented federal spending to support the economy and investor enthusiasm for technology stocks have done just that. Data mining software company Palantir Technologies (NYSE:PLTR) began trading on the Big Board on September 30 after a direct public offering (DPO). In this live list, no new shares of Palantir shares are offered. Instead, existing shareholders are allowed to sell their votes to new investors. Source: Sundry Photography/Shutterstock.com The New York Stock Exchange initially set a reference price of $7.25 per share, but on the first trading day Palantir shares opened at and closed at $9.50. He was also one of Facebook's first supporters (NASDAQ:FB). Palantir's early works, particularly with government agencies such as the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), were considered controversial and even secret. Grading the 10 hottest spacs of 2020 in preparation for the New Year Article today looks at what investors can expect from the company. Although PLTR is relatively overvalued, those investors with a long-term horizon may consider any dip towards $22.5 or even below as an opportunity to take long PLTR shares. Here's why. Government contracts and Palantir shares Since 2003, Palantir has expanded its customer base to other governments such as private corporations. For example, in November 2019, Palantir and Japan-based insurer Sompo (OTCMKTS: SMPNY) formed a joint venture together. Then, in June 2020, they launched the Real Data Platform for Security, Health and Welfare. Recent academic research by Oxford University's Roxana Akhmetova, claims the partnership is problematic because Thiel is a Trump adviser. In September, Palantir was awarded a $44.4 million, three-year contract by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA). It will provide data management and analysis services to the FDA's Center for Drug Evaluation and Research (CDER), focusing on potential new drugs. In early December, Palantir announced that it was working with the Greek government to improve its COVID-19 response efforts by integrating more data and analysis into the decision-making process. Recently, Palantir developed a tool for the U.S. government to track the production of coronavirus vaccines as well as their distribution. The UK National Health Service has also worked with Palantir. In the summer, CNBC reported, Britain's NHS gave Palantir access to millions of UK residents with personal data. Palantir recently signed a two-year contract with the NHS. Now it will provide the organization with a software platform for processing data. In fact, a recent corporate press release highlights, Palantir is supporting a wide range of organizations as they respond to the COVID-19 epidemic and adapt for the future. How Palantir's recent earnings came in mid-November, Palantir released Q3 results. Revenue reached $289.4 million, up 52% yoy. A net loss of $853.3 million was converted into a diluted net loss per share of 94 cents. As of September 30, the total cash and equivalents were $1.8 billion. Management raised full-year revenue in 2020 to about $1.070 billion to $1.072 billion, up 44% yoy. Company international expansion in quarterly reporting. Co-founder and CEO Alexander C. Karp cite, This work is critical to Japan's welfare and security, and Kengo Sakurada, the company's group chief executive, has been an important and reliable partner as we work with Sompo to expand our range in Asia. Palantir shares' P/E, P/S and P/B ratios were 208.33, 42.58 and 37.0, respectively. Pltr shares are foamy, even for a growth stock that can get a significant amount of government contracts. With the figures, it is now one of the most expensive software stocks on the street. For example, spdr S&P 500 Software & Services ETF (NYSEARCA: XSW) ratios are 30.62 and 6.63. Bottom Line Palantir is a growth stock and is likely to create shareholder value for years to come. However, it is richly valued and expensive. Therefore, long-term investors may consider buying dips, especially if the price falls toward $22.50. Are you currently a shareholder? You can think of starting an insured call position in PLTR stock. Then you may be able to protect some of your paper profits. For example, an ATM covered call that expires on January 15 will reduce portfolio volatility and provide some downside protection. Investors may also be considered by an exchange-traded fund (ETF) that also holds Palantir shares in its portfolio. Examples are Renaissance IPO ETF (NYSEARCA:IPO), First Trust U.S. Equity Opportunities ETF (NYSEARCA:FPX), Vanguard Mid-Cap ETF (NYSEARCA:VO), ARK Next Generation Internet ETF (NYSEARCA:ARKW) or BNY Mellon US Small Cap Core Equity ETF (NYSEARCA:BKSE). King said income-hungry investors need to look no further than the so-called Dow's Dog, the top 10 most productive of the 30 Dow Jones Industrial Average.Moderna (NASDAQ: MRNA) stocks are reaping the rewards of a successful Covid-19 vaccine, pushing MRNA stocks higher and higher. It is now winning more contracts to offer its vaccines and analysts are taking note. Source: Ascannio/Shutterstock.com And stocks have been climbing. Especially since the FDA approved the Covid-19 vaccine on December 18 for emergency use. For example, MRNA shares have risen more than 82% in the past six months. And over the past two months, the stock has risen more than 60% to about $111. Earnings forecasts and further price forecasts, earnings forecasts for 2021 and 2022 have put MRNA shares in a reasonable price despite recent increases. Analysts surveyed by Seeking Alpha now show that their earnings per share (EPS) will reach $9.46 by 2021. This figure is up from a loss of $1.69 in 2020.InvestorPlace - Stock Market News, Stock Advisory & Trading Tips In addition, for 2022 I estimate eps to be $9.92, or nearly $10 per share. That means MRNA shares are trading 11.4 times more EPS by 2022. This is seen by dividing $114.39 for $10 EPS. It's a very reasonable price. Grading 10 of the hottest spacs in 2020 in preparation for the New Year however, I believe this could be low balling down its potential income strength. Every day it seems that the company is receiving new contracts for the Covid-19 vaccine and related products. For example, the company has just signed up the U.S. Army to take an additional $19.7 billion contract for 100 million doses. That works out to about $20 per dose. This is in addition to the up to 770 million doses that Moderna said it had confirmed as of December 18. I think it's possible its earnings strength will be at least $12 per share over the next few years. This figure is 20% higher than analysts' estimates. Moreover, with 15 times earnings, a more suitable price for a company with such income strength, MRNA shares will be much more valuable. For example, EPS 15 times $12 delivers a price target of $180 per share. This is a potential increase of more than 57% compared to the current $114.39 on December 29. The long-term value of Moderna Further, in the long term, it is not out of the question that Moderna can sell 1 billion doses annually. For $20 each its revenue implications would be $2 billion annually. This price is significantly lower than a rumored $50 to $60 per dose price level. That's what The Financial Times and Reuters reported in July that Moderna will price its vaccines. In other words, my revenue estimate is very conservative. Currently, the stock trades six times its 2021 revenue, based on seeking alpha revenue forecasts. Therefore, at 6 times $20 billion of MRNA revenue should have a market capitalization of $12 billion. This is a 172% increase from the current market capitalization of $44.08 billion, which is 2.72 times the current price. In other words, MRNA shares could be worth $311.14 in the long term based on 1 billion doses a year at $20 per dose. This was found by a 2.72 times its current price of $114.39. And don't forget we're being conservative in our revenue estimates. Therefore, we can say based on its short-term earnings strength, MRNA shares are worth more than 57% at $180. And based on its long-term earnings strength, the stock is worth more than 172% at $311.14. What to do with MRNA shares Don't just believe me that MRNA shares are underrated. For example, Tipranks reports that 16 analysts believe the average price target for the stock should be $148.31. This shows a potential increase of over 30% compared to the current price. Moreover, Yahoo! Finance reports that 15 analysts have an average price target of $140.80 for MRNA shares. That shows a potential increase of 23% compared to the current price. So whether you look at MRNA from a short-term, long-term consensus perspective or analysis, the target price is still significantly higher than today. This happens, investors in MRNA shares have a good chance of making money. On the day of publication, Mark R.
